SITUATION SUMMARY REPORT

WEATHER SUMMARY

A trough of low pressure will continue to dominate the weather pattern today with morning low clouds from the coast to the valleys. The trough will pull away Friday with gradually warming temps and lowering humidity west of the mountains. Temps will heat up and humidity will plummet west of the mountains Saturday through Sunday as offshore northeast winds develop. Winds will become gusty through and below the Cajon Pass and the western San Geronio Pass and along the coastal facing slopes of the Santa Ana Mountains and foothills. Gusts of 30 to 40 mph is forecast. Localized gusts of 50+ mph is likely at wind-prone locales such as Freemont Canyon in Orange County.
